

Dear THSC Friend,

How do you keep the homeschool spark alive once spring has come and sometimes kids start to feel antsy?

I wanted to reach out and share some thoughts on keeping that homeschool motivation thriving as we near the end of the semester.

It's a time when the initial excitement might be fading a bit, but fear not!

There are plenty of ways to inject some creativity and enthusiasm into our homeschool days.

Test Reading Levels

Are your students struggling with their language arts or reading assignments? Now is a wonderful time to test their reading levels and see if you need to give them more of a challenge or step it down a notch.

Switch Up Electives

Are your kids sad when it's time to leave for their lessons or electives? There are signs you can watch for to know when it's time to keep going or to think about whether you should switch it up.

Create Momentum

Need a secret weapon to create momentum in your routine? See what Pam Barnhill has to say about that! You probably already have one of these in your home!

Teach Your Kids All About The Presidential Election Process!

Need a Way to Teach Your Kids About the Election?

It can be difficult to sort through all the latest news and teach your kids a balanced view of politics.

With the 2024 election coming up, you couldn't ask for a better time to help your kids learn all about the presidential election process and the differences between the political parties.

After all, it is never too early to introduce kids to the concepts of democracy and voting!

For a limited time, The Kids Guide is giving away their guides to The Presidential Election and The Kids Guide to Democrats & Republicans for free (only $1 shipping and handling each) to help your kids and grandkids learn about the presidential election process as it's happening.
